27. Match:

1. Asking this question before posting or commenting can save many people from a social blunder. If it is likely to send her heart into palpitations, it is probably not shareworthy.
 2. Heated discussions might be fun to read, but you are exposing yourself to a world of prying eyes. Don't ruin your reputation with a hasty comment about a sensitive topic. Keep religion and politics off your feeds.
 3. Take extra steps to safeguard your privacy. Be aware that location-tracking apps and background images can leave you vulnerable.
 4. We all have that one friend who can go from being single, to having a girl-friend/a boy-friend, and back to single in the span of two days. Close friends will know what's going on — the other 463 friends don't need to know the details.
 5. The fleeting images and messages might promote more authentic communication, but once they vanish, they might not be gone forever. The Internet doesn't forget, and people can make a screenshot. Be conscious that all images might be retrieved later.
 6. Take a step away from devices and nurture relationships the old-fashioned way: discuss issues in private, not on social media where everyone is witness to your dirty laundry.
 - a. Would grandma approve?
 - b. Silence the relationship status.
 - c. Master the art of talking.
 - d. If you can't say something nice, don't say anything at all.
 - e. Beware of disappearing apps.
